

Data Day 2027 Champions: Keynote Introduction Templates

How this works

Three short steps. You only ever write to someone you already know.

- 1. Check first. Ask your contact whether they are open to an introduction. Never forward their details to us before they say yes.
- 2. Introduce us. Connect them to Jordan Inskeep by email.
- 3. Step back. MORPC staff take the invitation from there. You are welcome to stay on the thread, but nothing further is asked of you.

Please do not discuss honoraria, travel, or dates, promise a slot, or mention the candidate publicly. Those are staff decisions and staff announcements.

Step 1: Check that they are open

Adapt freely. Your own voice works better than ours.

Subject: A quick question about Data Day 2027

Hi [Name],

I help out as a Champion for Data Day, the annual conference MORPC runs for Central Ohio's data community. It is February 18, 2027, and it will be the fifth year. They are looking for keynote speakers and you were the first person I thought of, given your work on [specific thing].

The theme is "Plotting What's Next," so they are after a forward look at where public-sector data work is heading rather than a retrospective. Roughly 200 people from local governments, nonprofits, universities, and civic-minded businesses.

Would you be open to an introduction to Jordan Inskeep, who runs the event? No commitment at all, just a conversation to see whether it fits.

[Your name]

If they say no, that is a perfectly good outcome. Let us know and we will close the loop on our end. No follow-up needed.

Step 2: Make the introduction

Send once they have agreed. Copy Jordan at jinskeep@morpc.org.

Subject: Intro: [Candidate name] <> Jordan Inskeep (Data Day 2027)

Jordan, meet [Name], [role] at [organization]. [One or two sentences on their work and why the room would want to hear from them.]

[Name], Jordan Inskeep leads Data Day for MORPC. Data Day is the region's annual gathering for the public-sector data community, February 18, 2027, in its fifth year. Jordan can share the theme, the format, and what a keynote involves.

I will let the two of you take it from here.

Short variants

LinkedIn message:

Hi [Name], MORPC is scouting keynote speakers for Data Day 2027 (February 18, Columbus), their fifth annual conference for Central Ohio's data community. The theme is a forward look at where public-sector data work is heading, and your work on [thing] fits it well. Open to an intro to the organizer? No commitment.

In person or by phone:

MORPC runs Data Day every February for the regional data community, and they are looking for keynotes for the fifth one. You came to mind because of [thing]. Want me to connect you with the organizer? It is just a conversation.

If they ask something you cannot answer

Common ones: fees, travel, how long the talk is, whether they can bring slides, who else is speaking. The answer is the same for all of them.

That is a better question for Jordan. Let me connect you.

Questions, or want a second pair of eyes before you send? Jordan Inskip,
