

Data Day 2027 Champions: Sponsor Introduction Templates

How this works

Same three steps as the keynote ask, and the same boundary: you open the door, staff walk through it.

1. Check first. Ask your contact whether they are open to hearing about it.
2. Introduce them to Amanda McEldowney, who owns sponsorship, and pass along the brochure if it helps.
3. Step back. Staff handle the package, the pricing, the ask, and the invoicing.

You never quote a price, negotiate, or make the ask. If someone wants numbers, send them the brochure or hand them to staff. Both are easier than fielding it yourself.

If your own employer might sponsor, that is welcome and common. Just hand it to staff rather than running it yourself, which keeps you clear of any conflict of interest.

Before you reach out, check with Amanda. We keep a shared contact log so two people are not approaching the same organization at once.

The one-line version

Data Day is MORPC's annual conference for Central Ohio's public-sector data community, 200+ attendees on February 18, 2027, in its fifth year. Sponsorships run from $500 to $5,000 across four levels. Every level includes an exhibitor table, logo placement on event materials, and event registrations. Higher levels add student scholarships, a breakout session to moderate or host, and speaking time in the plenary sessions.

Tiers are Platinum $5,000, Gold $3,000, Silver $1,500, and Bronze $500. The brochure has the full benefit grid. Share that rather than describing benefits from memory.

Step 1: Check that they are open

Subject: Data Day 2027 sponsorship, worth a look?

Hi [Name],

I help out as a Champion for Data Day, MORPC's annual conference for Central Ohio's data community. The fifth one is February 18, 2027, and it draws 200+ people from local governments, nonprofits, universities, and civic-minded businesses.

They are lining up sponsors now, and [organization] came to mind because [reason: your audience is in that room, you have sponsored similar events, your work touches this community]. Levels start at $500.

Would you be open to an introduction to Amanda McEldowney, who handles sponsorship? Happy to forward the brochure either way.

[Your name]

Step 2: Make the introduction

Subject: Intro: [Name], [organization] <> Amanda McEldowney (Data Day 2027 sponsorship)

Amanda, meet [Name], [role] at [organization]. [One sentence on the organization and why the fit makes sense.] They are interested in hearing more about sponsoring Data Day 2027.

[Name], Amanda handles sponsorship for Data Day at MORPC and can walk you through the levels, the benefits, and the timeline.

I will let the two of you take it from here.

[Your name]

Short variants

LinkedIn message:

Hi [Name], MORPC is lining up sponsors for Data Day 2027 (February 18, Columbus), the fifth annual conference for Central Ohio's data community, 200+ attendees across local government, nonprofits, and higher ed. Levels start at $500 and every level includes an exhibitor table. Want an intro to the sponsorship lead, or should I just send the brochure?

Forwarding the brochure cold, to someone you know well:

Thought of you for this. Data Day is MORPC's regional data conference, February 18, and sponsorship levels start at $500. Brochure attached. Amanda McEldowney (amceldowney@morpc.org) is the person to talk to if it is interesting.

Timing

Introductions are most useful September through November 2026. Sponsorships are confirmed in January 2027, and anything arriving after that is hard to fit into the printed program.

Sponsorship questions, or want to check whether an organization is already being approached? Amanda McEldowney, amceldowney@morpc.org

Questions about the Champion role or the event program? Jordan Inskip, jinskeep@morpc.org